it's 22,262 miles from Point Barrow, Alaska to the hardscrabble beach at Tierra del Fuego, the end of the Americas

...and I'm going to capture both the songs and stories of the most ancient societies on two continents and share them back first to the youngest of the indigenous through a planned public library book-sharing program and then to a North American audience via digital rich-media and a book project for Penguin-Random House this is the story not of mileage but a single clear notion: that we humans live where our stories are, where our songs are...

to seek a newer world in the spirit, songs and stories of the Dené of the high Arctic, the Haida of the Queen Charlotte Islands, the Hopi of New Mexico, the Maya of the Yucatan, the Aymara of the Andean altiplano the beating heart of this roadtrip is discovery—seeing global climate disruption through the senses and cultural memories of those closest to the land, the sea and the sky: the indigenous

the audience

the media outreach

the social media strategy
